GOLD NOTES MADE ARREST OF HAUPTMANN INEVITABLE, IS BELIEF

Lieutenant Finn, On Case From the Start, Close On His Trail When the "Break" Came—Walter Lyle, "Gas" Station Attendant, Recorded the Licenses of Drivers Offering Bills of Wanted Denominations.

This is the tenth of a series of 12 articles on Bruno Richard Hauptmann who on January 2 will be brought to trial charged with the murder of the Lindbergh baby.

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service Staff Correspondent

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 20.—(INS)—Arrest of Bruno Richard Hauptmann as the passer of the Lindbergh ransom bills was inevitable because this "hot money" was showing up at intervals along a path paralleling the East Side subway in New York city.

Crafty as Hauptmann seemed to be, he was not slick enough to cover his trail. Nor did he reckon with the skill and determination of Lieut. James J. Finn, the New York police department's "ace Lindbergh case detective." Nor upon the alertness of Walter Lyle, gasoline station attendant, who methodically recorded the license numbers of the cars of all drivers who offered bills of the Lindbergh ransom denominations.

For months Lieut. Finn and his "Lindbergh case detectives" were only a hop, skip and a jump behind Hauptmann. It was apparent to them, from the manner in which the ransom bills were turning up, that the man passing them must live on New York's East Side—probably in the Bronx.

The banks had the serial numbers of the Lindbergh bills. Usually it took some time for the "hot money" to reach the banks after it had been passed in some store or saloon. Finn was constantly running down clues emanating from these sources and was gradually closing in on Hauptmann at the time of his arrest.

At the same time, Finn was co-operating with the Federal authorities and with Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, superintendent of the New Jersey state police. Schwarzkopf had been in supreme charge of the Lindbergh case investigation since the day it "broke."

Several days after the ransom was paid by Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon, a Lindbergh bill turned up in the East River Savings Bank at 95th street, New York City. Many Germans live in this part of Manhattan. Finn and his detectives suspected a German was involved because they remembered that in one of the ransom notes the German word "Gute" was used for good.

As the months drifted by other Lindbergh bills showed up in a few beer halls, in grocery stores and at a gasoline station or two. Whoever was spending the money was doing so in a careful manner.

Finn and his investigators questioned storekeepers and others and obtained a good idea of the type of man who was passing the money. Most descriptions agreed that he was a man about five feet eight or nine inches tall, with sunken eyes and flat cheeks.

Psychiatrists studied the hand-writing of the ransom notes. Their conception of the type of man who wrote the ransom letters coincided with the views of the police as gained from those questioned about ransom money that had been passed. Then, too, "Jafsie" gave a description of the man he did business with the night he paid over the money and it tallied with the description of the type of a man Finn was hunting.

But it remained for the quick-witted gasoline station attendant—Walter Lyle—to bring about Hauptmann's arrest. One day in September a man in a Dodge sedan drove up to the station at 2115 Lexington avenue, New York City. He bought gasoline and tendered a $10 gold certificate to Lyle.

"You don't see many of these any more," remarked Lyle.

"Oh, yes you do," replied the man (he was Hauptmann) in an unguarded moment. "Why, I've got a hundred or so more."

As Hauptmann drove away, Lyle jotted down the license number of the car as he had been instructed to do on all gold notes. It was "4U-13-41."

When the bill was deposited at the bank, the number was checked and bank officials immediately telephoned Colonel Schwarzkopf. In a jiffy the police got the license number and other details from the filling station and were on Hauptmann's trail.

They followed him for several days. On Sept. 19, Hauptmann drove his car with the "4U-13-41" license out of his garage and away from his house. He had gone only a block when Finn and his men blocked him.

They found a $20 Lindbergh bill in one of his pockets. He said it was the only one he had. But the police made this story look pretty sick a short time later when they found $13,750 in Lindbergh money secreted beneath the floor in his garage. And later they found $840 cleverly hidden in holes bored in a plank in the garage.

Also in the Hauptmann home, the police found the home address and private telephone number of Dr. Condon, the Lindbergh intermediary. This data was jotted down in pencil on the Hauptmann baby's nursery.

The "Jafsie" telephone number and address had been smudged as if someone had tried to erase the markings. Hauptmann's explanation was that he wrote the notations down simply because he was "interested in the Lindbergh case."

Finn was promoted and he was given an advance in salary of $450 a year. In praising him Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine pointed out that Finn was assigned to the

150 Children Made Happy At Girl Reserves' Party

There were 150 happy children at the high school yesterday afternoon, when this large group comprising some of the less fortunate tots of the borough, was entertained at the annual Christmas party of the Girl Reserves.

The Reserves proved to be royal hosts, and provided a most happy afternoon for the boys and girls who ranged in ages from four to ten years.

Although the weather was most inclement, sunshine filled the cafeteria and auditorium as the fine program was carried out. The Reserves had arranged for transportation for the children, and each child was called for and at the end of the pleasant afternoon taken to his or her home.

Games and a program of entertainment were participated in, then the children were ushered into the cafeteria. There they were served with as many sandwiches as they could eat, each received a half pint of chocolate milk donated by the Keystone Dairy, and apples, tangerines, a candy cane, pop corn, and three cookies were given to each.

Returning to the auditorium Santa Claus greeted the youngsters, and presented each with at least two gifts. The gifts were made possible through contributions of the Reserves, members of the Mothers' and Fathers' Association, and friends.

BLONDES PREFERRED

BOSTON — (INS)—Blondes are the choice of this year's crop of men students at Boston University—but they must not be too beautiful. The reason for the not too beautiful part of it was explained by some of the young men, who said that the beautiful blondes usually possessed nothing but beauty.

BRACKENRIDGE — (INS) — Conditions in Brackenridge are too good to suit Councilman John Glenn.

Glenn assured his colleagues at a meeting of borough council that he aims to please, but he said he could not help lamenting the days when "often as many as six persons were waiting for conferences with me," and all with complaints about local affairs.

TELLS ABOUT THE HISTORIC ROADS IN LOWER BUCKS

Colonial Club Members at Doylestown Read Papers of Interesting Character

HOUSES IN BENSALEM

William Biles House is Topic For Another of The Papers

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 20.—Historic roads in the lower sections of Bucks county, as well as old houses, were the subject of discussions Tuesday afternoon at the meeting of the Colonial Club at the home of Mrs. Calvin S. Boyer, Doylestown.

Pre-Revolutionary roads and ferries in the "extreme southern section of Bucks county were described by the speakers. Mrs. Webster Achey, Spring Valley, spoke on Bristol and Middle-town townships, and showed a clearly-drawn modern map of the country in and before 1700 and described the original route of some of the oldest highways, then mere tracks or paths. These included the King's Path, Durham Road and others around Bristol.

The map, drawn in 1683, published in 1687, and owned by Webster S. Achey, Doylestown attorney, had no roads marked on it, although at the date of publication many roads had been built through the section it pictured.

Mrs. E. P. Thebaud, of Buckingham, described the condition of roads and historic houses in Bensalem township about the same period and located on maps the sites of the Old Manor and some of the ferries.

Mrs. J. H. Blanchard, of Bycott Road, Hollicong, read a paper that dealt with Fallsington. She showed photostatic copies of old maps and outline sketches of one of the old houses in the center of the village of Fallsington. She also showed a sketch of the William Biles house on the River Road, built in 1726, and of another very old house in the same vicinity.

Discussion of the dates and localities of the old landmarks of seventeenth and eighteenth centuries proved to be very interesting.

Mrs. Blanchard will be hostess at the January meeting when old roads and houses in another section of Bucks county will be discussed. Papers will be read at the January meeting by Mrs. Gladstone Fessenden, of Buckingham Valley; Mrs. James Carr, of Hollicong; and Miss Elizabeth Cox.

BANDITS GET $48,000

Philadelphia, Dec. 20.—In a bold daylight foray, four armed bandits raided a branch office of the Philadelphia Electric Company here today and escaped with a Christmas payroll consisting of $48,000 in cash.

The daring robbery was tentatively tied up by police with the criminal exploits of Robert Mais, arch-criminal and escaped convict hunted through the east. Investigating authorities said two employees of the Electric Company had partially identified the leader of the hold-up gang as Mais, suspected kidnap killer of William "Big Bill" Weiss, Philadelphia night life figure and racketeer.

Their faces hidden by heavy masks, four bandits drove up to the 23rd and Market streets branch of the Electric Company in a large sedan this morning. The car was parked in front of the building and the four robbers, each carrying sawed-off shot guns, leaped out of the machine and walked briskly into the place. In a downstairs corridor they encountered Earl Smith, a night watchman. Without hesitation, one of the robbers slugged Smith on the head with the butt of the shotgun. The watchman fell unconscious and the robbers proceeded upstairs to the paymaster's office. There they knocked on the door but the paymaster refused to admit them, whereupon one of the bandits shot out the glass in the door, reached inside and unlocked it.

Twenty employees were lined up at the payroll window awaiting their wages. All of them were cowed by the bandits who ordered the employees to keep their hands in the air.

The bandits snatched up the leather bags containing the payroll and backed out of the payroll office, ran downstairs and out into the street, where a fifth accomplice, unmasked and apparently unarmed had been standing guard at the entrance to the building.

The robbers jumped into the automobile and sped away. The car was later identified by police as one stolen in Dauphin county. This gave credence to the report that Mais was implicated in the crime as earlier this week he had been reported seen in Central Pennsylvania.

TO AWARD CASH PRIZES IN LIGHTING CONTEST

A Total of $35 To Be Divided Between Three Award Winners

NAME THREE JUDGES

With the rapid approach of the day, more and more residents of the Bristol region are evincing interest in the Brighter Community Christmas Contest which is being fostered by the Bristol Exchange Club.

Not alone because of the interesting prizes offered for the most pleasing displays of Christmas lighting effects by householders, but from a civic standpoint, is the movement showing widespread popularity, according to Keith Rosser, president of the club.

"It is rightly felt by our people that occasions of many kinds may come and go but there is only one Christmas," he pointed out. "And on this year of all recent years, it is clear that there is genuine reason for rejoicing and for giving visible expression to our feeling of exaltation."

"Christmas, of course, is a season for consideration of others—and this spirit has rightly spread even to our decorations. Thus this contest is based on the exterior appearance of the decorations—the lighting effects upon trees and shrubbery, upon porches, about doorways and windows. It has to do with the kind of Christmas message which is presented by the home."

TRAGEDY STRIKES BLOW AT HOME OF BLIND VETERAN

Wife and Mother of Infant Takes Poison, Causing Convulsions

DIES IN THE HOSPITAL

Husband is Grief-Stricken at Loss of "Pal" and Knows No Reason

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 20.—Tragedy struck a blow at the home of a totally blind World War veteran and son of a deceased heir to the Persian throne, here yesterday when his wife died in convulsions at the Doylestown Emergency Hospital, leaving him with a two and one-half year old infant daughter.

The dead mother is Mrs. Carrie Vearrindy, twenty-seven, of Mercer avenue, this borough. The husband who lost sight of both eyes in action with the American Forces in France during the World War, is George Vearrindy, 42.

The young wife died in the hospital early yesterday morning but it was not until late in the day that Dr. John J. Sweeney, Coroner of Bucks county, revealed the fact after posting the body, that Mrs. Vearrindy died as a result of some type of poison that she had taken at her home.

Vearrindy is the son of the late Jourd Vearrindy, who at one time was an heir to the Persian throne. He died in Persia. Mrs. Vearrindy is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Weiss, of 7039 Buist avenue, Phila., both of whom were summoned to the grief-stricken home today. The surviving infant daughter is Jourdin Ann-Mod Vearrindy.

"My pal, you are the only one in the world that I had left to take care of me," the husband said as he placed his hands on his wife's shoulders at the hospital a short time before death.

Friends of the family and relatives were at a loss to know why Mrs. Vearrindy would have committed suicide. She collapsed on the floor of their home here, the blind husband thinking that his wife had fainted. He walked to the home of a neighbor where he summoned a physician who ordered the woman rushed to the hospital in an ambulance. Convulsions followed and then death came.

The blind husband told friends tonight that his wife had not been feeling well lately but only three days ago she wrote to her parents in Philadelphia asking them to come to their Doylestown home to spend the day and prepare for the Christmas holidays.

CONSERVATIVE—BUT FAST

Those who inspected the famous English railway train at the Century of Progress where it stood in striking contrast with the streamlined Diesel engine trains considered the last word in designing in this country, read with interest that the famous "Flying Scotsman" in England has set a new speed record. The train of an engine and four coaches ran from London to Leeds, 186 miles, in 151 minutes.

No doubt the trial of speed was staged by British railway interests as a reply to critics who were pointing to recent achievements of trains of newer design in America and Germany. It is characteristic of English conservatism to cling to that which has proved good until the new has demonstrated its superiority.

And the English railways are good. They not only have hung up speed records, but they continually prove their correctness by furnishing a large traveling public a rapid, punctual, comfortable service at moderate rates. Part of the secret of their success is due to the economy of using cars and engines of relatively light weight, and to the safety of well kept roadbeds.

Eventually the British railways may adopt the Diesel-driven engines and the streamline trains; but they will be content with a good service while railroads in Germany, Holland and the United States are experimenting.

SELF-MADE MEMORIALS

No doubt Robert Aitken is a capable sculptor. He also seems to have a colossal nerve, for he has included his own portrait with those of Chief Justice Hughes, Taft, Marshall, Elihu Root and Cass Gilbert, in the western pediment of the new Supreme Court Building in Washington.

Discovery of this fact is said to have surprised the Supreme Court Building Commission. But what right have they to be surprised? Were they so careless as to leave such an important detail to the judgment of the sculptor? It is said they have not criticized Sculptor Aitken, because the use of living models "has ample precedent." So it is: Michelangelo is said to have put his own face in one of the Sistine Chapel paintings, for instance. But he did not enshrine himself beside Pope Julius.

Mr. Aitken is guilty of bad taste, and the Supreme Court Building Commission of carelessness. But the work is done, and if photography does not lie, it is a good artistic job. Let it stand, but let the American people serve notice that nothing of the sort is to happen again, else Washington will be full of self-made memorials to sculptors and painters.

"BEACH BEAUTY" by ARTHUR SHUMWAY

CHAPTER XXXII

The nurse let Kay in to see Pete the next day. She went into the narrow hospital room timidly, expecting to see him looking deathly ill, but was pleasantly surprised to see that he seemed to be resting comfortably and that, except for the bandages, which, with the sheathing, were startlingly white against his brown skin, he was much the same old Pete.

He grinned when he saw her. "How's this for a picture?" he asked. At that, his voice did sound weak. But the grin won and Kay returned it, confident that he was out of danger.

"Not bad," she said. "You should have borrowed one of my negligees."

She sat down beside him. "Feel all right?" she asked.

"I've felt worse."

"You wouldn't fool me? It isn't everybody who bounces a bullet off his skull," she said.

"No, I'm all right. They just won't let me romp around. Little headache, I'll admit."

Plenty headache, she thought, but she said, "Well—why keep it a secret? What happened to you?"

He looked at her curiously. "You don't know?" he asked.

"No. What?" she said anxiously. Pete grinned again and shrugged his big shoulders.

"That's what eats me. I don't know. All I remember is I was walking up your drive when I thought I heard somebody in the bushes. I did a dive in and something went boom. Next thing I knew a nurse was leaning down at me. Everybody seemed to know something except me. I'm only the guy that got shot—or so they tell me. What did happen? Come on. I can take it."

"Pete—I'm not trying to be funny. I don't know what happened. Nobody seems to. I heard the shot and went running out and there you were."

"You found me?"

She nodded.

"That must have been fun."

"It nearly scared me to death. I thought—"

He reached for her hand. "Then you do like me a little?"

"Well, I don't want people shooting you," she said.

"Old Kay."

"The police are investigating," Kay said.

Pete's manner changed. He smiled wily. "They probably won't get far," he said.

"Why not?"

"Because they won't."

"Pete, do you think—"

"What else can I think?"

They looked at each other solemnly.

"But I can't believe it," she said. "I talked to him and—"

Suddenly she checked herself before she blurted out the secret that Earl Harrow was paying Pete's hospital bill. There was time enough to tell him that when he was up and well.

"And what?" he asked, a calm challenge in his voice.

"But Pete—it's silly to think it. Look at his position. After all—"

"He warned me to get out of town. I'd call that a threat."

"But Pete—he's a big man. Why, it's ridiculous when you stop to think of it. He has more to do than to go around hawking people shot just because of a little piggy."

I could believe a lot of things about him, but not that. Don't you understand? Somebody has been trying to do something to him, those racketeers he had the trouble with probably, and they've been hanging about my house. When you came back to town and were seen about, too, he naturally might have suspected you had something to do with it because you didn't like him—that's silly, too, of course—but he's suspicious of everybody these days. And in a way, you can't blame him."

"No?" he said slowly.

Kay smiled. She knew what to say, what really to believe. It did seem inconceivable, though, that Harrow would have had Pete shot. He could have, yes, but he wouldn't have.

finger," Harrow said. "You must try to believe me, Kay; I'm awfully sorry, really. Especially that it was Pete."

"Why Pete?"

"Because"—he smiled ruefully—"that complicates matters so. With us, I mean. They were had enough before. You must hate me. I'll bet you think I'm all sorts of a Mephistopheles."

"I don't know what to think."

"I'm glad you're frank."

"Someone has to be."

Harrow gave a little sigh and shook his head despairingly.

"I'm no hard-boiled underworld king," he said. "I'm really a pretty law-abiding fellow."

"You're really a very strange person, though, you'll have to admit."

"The papers sometimes make me think so," he said. "I read about myself and know it's true, but when I look inside my own mind I seem as simple as they come—too simple sometimes for my own good. I suppose you saw the little piece yesterday?"

"About the girl in France? Carlotta Vestra?"

He nodded.

Kay wondered what to say. Trying to be as tactful as possible, she said, "She must be a very remarkable person."

"She is," Harrow said seriously. "A very remarkable person."

He looked out toward the town, a mist of reminiscence in his eyes.

"You were very fond of her once, weren't you?"

"Very," he said gravely.

"I'm sorry then."

"Are you?" He seemed to return to the present as he put his hand over hers and smiled.

She was sorry then that she had said it. This situation was becoming embarrassing. After all, why should she pity him, and, pitying him, why should she be so tactless as to let him know it?

"She's getting a Prince," he said, then let the remark remain suspended, unanswerable. There was a rather long pause, embarrassing to Kay, and he said, "I'll be dum—a Prince."

"She's really a great actress, isn't she?" Kay asked.

Harrow turned his lips, his lean handsome face reflective and for a moment he seemed to consider the question judicially.

"I don't suppose she is," he admitted. "She's a great woman, a great personality. A great actress though? I'm afraid not. But that'll be our secret, Kay, ours and hers. She knows

EARLY TULIPS

Early tulips are the only ones that can be grown at all successfully in the house in pots. While the tulip is not as easily grown as a house plant as are hyacinths and daffodils, yet they can be grown reasonably well in the ordinary dwelling with careful attention. The chief factor necessary is to give them a cool window and keep them away from the immediate neighborhood of registers and radiators.

Bulbs should be potted now, the tips of the bulbs just below the surface of the soil and set away in a cool dark place such as a basement, cellar or closet to permit them to form roots. They should not be brought to light until the new growth is well out of the bulb. They are very susceptible to plant lice and an old time trick is well worth perpetuating, that of sprinkling broken up cigars or tobacco dust over the surface of the pot when they are set away to form roots. This discourages the aphides at the start.

The earliest types of early tulips as marked in catalogues should be used for potting. The earliest of all are the little Duc von Thol tulips and these are most certain to succeed as pot plants. The larger types will test the skill of the grower under ordinary living room conditions, but there is much satisfaction if they can be flowered successfully. They are much used in greenhouse work for the Easter season and are always grown cool.

They are always popular as potted plants but it is perhaps best to trust to an early display in the garden rather than to try for indoor display with them. Beds of single early tulips offer the first brilliant color of spring in April before the frost is out of the ground with the little Duc von Thols which follow immediately upon the crocuses. These are now seldom used for the garden because of their small size but their scarlet coloring is attractive. Then come the water lily tulip, Kauffmanniana, and the great race of single and double earlies that carry the season along into May and the gorgeous late flowering tulips.

Plant formal beds of the single earlies for broad masses of glowing color. They are the first brilliant red bloom in the garden. They also offer the first glowing yellows, the daffodils in their yellows being of softer tones. The single early tulips will mature and ripen their leaves in time to be taken up to use the bed for other plants.

DARING CREATIONS SHOWN IN GAY GOWNS FOR THE HOSTESSES

By Nadia De Beaud

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS—(INS)—That a hostess in her home need not dress as she would when a guest in somebody else's home is the idea which guided Helene Yrande in the making of an informal hostess gown which is part of the new Duchess of Kent's wardrobe.

This point of view is widely accepted in England, and many of the Parisian dress houses show daring creations, in which a woman could never go visiting, but which look charming in her own home.

The Yrande gown made for the Duchess consisted of a banana-colored satin body fitting robe, made to fit close, with a double faced lame coat over it. It was gold lined with silver cloth, also made close fitting with long and tight sleeves. The décollete was round both back and front and without any ornament, thus giving the pure line of the Renaissance period.

BEHIND the SCENES in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL

Copyright, 1934.

King Features Syndicate, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD. . . . Everyone in Hollywood speaks well of Gail Patrick. What she is doing for her brother is one reason why they will keep on doing it.

Richard Fitzpatrick (that's the real family name) is 18 years old.

He graduated last summer from the Birmingham High school and Gail promptly brought him to Hollywood.

The kid's one ambition is to go to Annapolis. His sister, who won enough scholarships to practically pay her expenses through Howard college, has undertaken to prepare him to pass the entrance examinations of the naval academy. During the past year she has bought him books on mathematics and kindred subjects. She also has persuaded him to join the Hollywood Y. M. C. A. to keep in physical shape.

There are several schools in California which make a specialty of prep-work for Annapolis. On her Paramount salary, Gail will put her brother in one of them, paying all his expenses. And then she'll try to see that he gets the coveted appointment.

The Joseph M. Schenck posse got its supreme test the other day at a surprise luncheon given to him in the Vendome Cafe by no less than 12 film beauties. The producer's neck was encircled by 12 leis of flowers and upon his head was placed a crown of gardenias. Among the pretty hostesses who laughed at his discomfiture were Merle Oberon, Mrs. Clark Gable, Norma Shearer, Mrs. Nick Schenck, Lela Hyams, Mona Maris, Ruth Selwyn and Anita Lees.

And if you only knew what was in those telegrams the waiter kept bringing in.

One of Hollywood's most famous sets, the Paramount ship, is to be torn down at last. Built in 1927 at a cost of $50,000, the cross-section of an ocean liner has been used in 37 pictures and by almost every star at the studio. Its single funnel, visible over the wall of the studio, has focussed the curious gaze of many a Hollywood visitor.

But Cecil B. De Mille needs the space for "The Crusades" and everything falls before Mr. De Mille.

The ship will be replaced by an exterior of the courtyard of Windsor Castle, as it was in the time of Richard the Lion Hearted.

Well, we are learning things about James Cagney. The other day Kay

Francis picked him as one of her 10 favorite screen heroes. His performances fascinate her, she confesses, perhaps more than any other actor on the screen.

And now Joan Crawford assures me that Cagney is one of her two big screen crushes.

The other is Ronald Colman. This girl, who plays sophisticated roles, actually insists she felt shy when she danced with Cagney for the first time the other evening at the Screen Actors' Guild ball. And she still hasn't recovered from the thrill of having Ronald Colman call unexpectedly once to take her to a party—one of those things where the hostess assigned partners.

What temperamental star now refuses to let the supervisor of her picture come on the set?

KNICK-KNACKS—

They say it was one of the funniest moments in months, when Director Josef von Sternberg told Caesar Romero to kiss Marlene Dietrich "for approximately 40 frames." The bewildered Romero—he is a newcomer to Hollywood—hadn't the vaguest idea that 40 frames mean two and one-half feet of film.

And, being a Latin, he must have been shocked at this efficient measurement of romance. . . . There is whispering about Leone Dune leaving Radio. She has only one more picture to make on her contract. . . . Has it been printed, the nice picture Abe Frank made after the Mary Blackford benefit? In their zeal, the kids oversold the Coconut Grove and many people never got seats. They returned the tickets, but rather than see Mary lose the money, Manager Frank told the ticket-holders to come to the Grove some other night and take their $2.50 out in trade. . . . Jack La Rue is now a big vintner. The Italian actor has bought half interest in a wine company with vineyards near San Gabriel. . . . Writer Allen Rivkin gets a break. Fox has bought his contract from M. G. M. and is letting him go to New York to close the deal for a play and to confer with the publishers of his new book, "I Wasn't Born Yesterday" (written in collaboration with Leonard Spiegelgass). . . . And the Hardie Brights (Martha Sleeper) are heading east to take a flyer in Broadway plays. They've leased their apartment for three months.

DID YOU KNOW—

That Jack Oakie used to play basketball at the De La Salle High school in New York?

To Award Cash Prizes In Lighting Contest

to all who shall pass that way during the holiday evenings.

"I regard that as one of the most satisfying aspects of the movement."

To be eligible for the competition, all decorative designs must be installed and in operation not later than Saturday, December 22, and must be lighted each night from dusk to 11 o'clock p. m., until and including New Year's Eve.

The judges, consisting of Miss Eunice Williams, Mrs. J. J. Willaman and Dr. Charles H. Pest, will proceed on their rounds without previous knowledge of contestants and will make their decisions without regard for the size of the display, purely on the basis of the beauty, propriety and effectiveness shown by contestants in ringing out the cheery message of the Yuletide.

The prizes consist of first prize of $20, second prize, $10, and a third prize of $5.00.

From many sources information has come to indicate that this third annual community observance of Christmas will find a record number of participants and that the ingenuity shown in arranging lighting effects will prove of a high order.

CURIOSITY SATISFIED

KANSAS CITY — (INS) — Mose Smith, negro, obtained a job as porter in a jewelry store here and was well pleased with his job. But he was puzzled as to the purpose of a little white button behind a counter. Finally his curiosity overcame him and he pressed the button. Within a few minutes three automobiles, loaded with heavily-armed policemen, stopped in front of the store. Mose then learned "the little white button" was a burglar alarm.

FRAMES FOR PICTURES SHOULD BE SELECTED FOR THEIR HARMONY

By Rhondana A. Armstrong

(Home Economics Representative)

Harmony with other furnishings in the room as well as the picture should be the guide in selecting a picture frame.

First of all, the frame must help to bring out the beauty of the picture instead of overshadowing it. The frame should be simple in line, design, and color. It should not be elaborate, highly ornamented, or glistening with gold or silver finish. Some frames are tinted, and if carefully selected they may be used to bring out the color in the picture.

Oil paintings and large pictures should be framed "close," which means without using a mat and with a moulding large enough to give the appearance of balance.

Small pictures usually show up to a better advantage if mounted on a mat and then framed. The amount of mat outside the picture should be in proportion to the size of the picture. This margin usually is equal on top and sides with a greater amount at the bottom. The color and texture should enhance the beauty of the picture.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Woolson entertained Norman Pickering, George Miller, John Miller and William Voght, Philadelphia, Monday.

"Twas the Night Before Christmas" and as the words of that immortal poem run through my mind, I'm thinking, too, of a day more than 300 years ago. The day was the 20th of December in the year 1620, when the pilgrims landed in Plymouth, Mass. If you have never been to Plymouth you can hardly realize the hardships our sturdy forefathers endured. True, the country was arrayed in summer grandeur when I saw it, which lent to it much charm. But even now, it is decidedly rugged country—more than 300 years after that landing.

But here, I must not go into a lengthy dissertation about Plymouth and our Pilgrim fathers. First of all, space will not permit, and secondly, it was my intention, when I sat down to write this column, to wish for all my homemaker friends much joy and happiness and may the forthcoming day—Christmas—find you all at peace with the world and surrounded by those who are dear to you.

I'm sure to leave the planning of the Christmas dinner to you, knowing full well that you will put into the plans for that dinner everything that will make it the festive occasion of the year.

I'm sure the linens selected to grace our table are snowy white, the silver is shining and the glassware glistening—I wouldn't be a bit surprised, either, to know that the turkey has already been ordered, and the cranberry jelly made and ready to be unmolded onto one of the very best china dishes we possess.

So again—a Merry Christmas to all!

Mrs. E. Becker, Mrs. Ella Stickel and daughters, Ella and Anna, and John Sweeney, Philadelphia, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Thoman, Sunday.

Are you all in? If you lack energy, lose sleep, feel nervous and physically unfit, you should begin treatment at once with PERSENIC, the powerful tonic containing four animal gland extracts to renew normal action of vital forces. Remember! You are only as vigorous as your glands. PERSENIC arouses weak glands. It is the logical treatment for men who realize they need an agent of this kind. Ask for circular.

BISIGNANO TIES WITH GOLDBERG; SHIKAT WINS

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 20.—Abie Goldberg and Al (Basy) Bisignano, semi-finalists, stole the wrestling show away from the wind-up performers last night at the Arena as Promoter Johnny Ipp staged his last 1934 mat show of the season.

Goldberg and Bisignano wrestled a 45-minute draw that drew down the whole-hearted acclaim of a fair-sized crowd. In contrast to the "off color" style of grappling that has come so much to the fore of late, Abie and Al waged a clean-cut, earnest scrap throughout, and their efforts were applauded wildly when Referee John Seaman, of Trenton, raised the arm of each in token of a draw.

In the scheduled two-fall-out-of-three wind-up, Richard Shikat, powerful German and former mat champion, reduced his evening's travail to one fall by finishing Floyd Marshall so thoroughly in 16 minutes and 21 seconds that he (Marshall) was unable to answer the bell for the second fall.

With Eddie Dar's announcement that Marshall would be "unable to continue," the curtain was drawn on wrestling here for 1934. It was announced that there will be no show next week, Christmas week. On the following Tuesday, however, Ipp will present a New Year's afternoon show, the first bout to start at 3.30 o'clock. It will be the first afternoon mat card ever presented here, and Ipp stated that he is working on an all-star bill in order to "start the New Year right."

Marshall seemed in a fair way to give Shikat trouble last night as the 15-minute mark of their first fall elapsed. He sent the former champion spinning with a series of flying mares. Shikat suddenly turned on his foe with fury, however, and applied three consecutive back-drops. The third one left Marshall flat on his back and terminated the wrestling activities of the evening.

ACE REPORTER GOES OUT AND GETS NEWS

James L. Kilgallen Believes Real News Has To Be Dug For

FAMILIARLY CALLED JIM

Someone once said there were two classes of newspapermen—good ones and bad ones. He might have been a trifle more specific and said there were newspapermen who went out and got the news and newspapermen who waited for it to come to them.

James L. Kilgallen is of the first, and unfortunately rapidly diminishing, class: In his daily work for the International News Service, he is a living exponent of the tried and true rule of journalism, that the real news has to be dug for with hard work, ingenuity and tact and personality, and that he who waits for it to be served on a silver platter waits in vain.

"Kil" or "Jim" as he is familiarly known from one end of the country to another, occupies a unique position in modern press association work. For years he was known as the I. N. S. ace reporter with the western hemisphere as his "beat," but even that sweeping characterization was augmented in scope when he took to the European field last year and added scoops on foreign soil to his achievements in America.

The outstanding result of this trip abroad was Kilgallen's remarkable coverage of the flight and apprehension of Samuel Insull.

Sent flying on the chase by a cable from New York headquarters while attending a stiff-shirt reception given by Premier Mussolini at the Palazzo Venezia in Rome, Kil followed Insull across the Mediterranean to Istanbul, where the relentless law caught up with him. From there he accompanied the aged utilities magnate back to the United States when his attempts to escape deportation failed, and on the ship that carried them home Kilgallen established a contact and a news source that has few parallels in modern journalism.

In recognition of his tact and his grasp of the complicated legal tangle of the case and in deference to his enterprise and initiative as well as his accuracy in reporting events on the long flight across southern Europe, Insull consented to give his ship-board interviews to Kilgallen alone.

It was "Kil" who thus was able to tell months in advance that Insull's defense during his trial in Chicago would be that he had made "honest mistakes" and that the vast machinery of Federal vengeance had been set in motion to make him a scapegoat for scores of others who sinned more heavily and with sinister design. It was Kilgallen to whom Insull handed his lengthy "vindication" statement when he departed from the liner Exlonia in New York harbor, and by the natural process of events, it was thus the I. N. S. that scooped the world on this important angle of the story.

The Insull story with its beat-studded dossier might have been said to have climaxed Kilgallen's journalistic career, and if biographers amused themselves with the lives and careers of hard-working newspapermen they might assign it this honored place in Jim's life tale. But as an actual matter of fact, it was to him just another chapter, another succession of days spent with the single-minded purpose of getting the news first, and getting it right.

For the past ten years or more, Kilgallen's reputation has grown as the nemesis of important figures in American life who have traditionally fought shy of newspaper interviewers. One by one the tycoons of finance and science as well as the "big-shots" of crime fell before his persistent attack.

One of the outstanding achievements in this particular line was Kilgallen's feat in obtaining the only interview ever given by the late Thomas A. Edison to a newspaperman. He has interviewed Henry Ford, John D. Rockefeller, Sr., Harvey Firestone, "Al" Smith, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, Commander Byrd, Jack Dempsey, Babe Ruth, Al Capone, former president Cosgrave of the Irish Free State and others far too numerous to mention.

But "Kil" is no cane-carrying, spatulating "journalist" who spends his life waiting in anterooms for the opportunity to interview headlines. He is first, last and always a reporter, and his versatility is clearly shown by his assignment to almost all of the really big stories breaking in the United States in the last fifteen years.

He has "covered" more important American murder trials than perhaps any other newspaper man. Among them were the Hall-Mills murder case, the George Remus trial, the Snook case at Columbus, Ohio, the famed Peacock case at White Plains, N. Y., and the McManus trial for the murder of Arnold Rothstein in New York. He also covered the Harry Thaw insanity hearing in Pittsburgh, the Vestris and Morro Castle hearings in New York and the never-to-be-forgotten Peaches Browning trial at White Plains. He has written more than 2,500,000 words about trials alone and has spent a considerable portion of his life in courtrooms.

Few really big stories have escaped his searching eye and facile pen. He covered the Alabama flood disaster, the Ku Klux Klan war in Oklahoma, the mine massacre at Herrin, Ill., numerous trans-Atlantic flights, the Wall Street collapse, the arrival of the ZR-3 at Lakehurst and the crash of the Akron, the recent San Francisco strike and the sinking of the Morro Castle.

He has been on the job at world's series games, championship fights, football games, polo matches, boat races, naval manoeuvres, speedway classics, death-chair executions and international conferences. He was as equally at home with Al Capone in his palatial and heavily-guarded mansion overlooking Biscayne Bay as he was in strolling around while John D. Rockefeller played eight holes of golf at Ormond Beach.

Today, "Kil" is on what he believes is one of the greatest assignments of his career—the Lindbergh trial. Thrown into the thick of it with the sudden arrest of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, "Kil" has been on the trail of the dour German carpenter's fight for freedom from the beginning. He, like many others, is convinced the forthcoming trial at Flemington will be one of the greatest stories of the decade, possibly excelled only by the surprise elements and sensations only by the cruel crime which preceded it.

There was a time when Kilgallen allowed the tables to be turned and himself was interviewed. He was asked what he considered the prime essentials of a good reporter, and replied "tact and versatility," with the accent on the former.

Kilgallen is a native of Pittston, Pa. Before joining International News Service, he worked on newspapers in dozens of cities throughout the middle west, but received his early training in Chicago and has always looked upon the windy city as his "home town." He is married and has two daughters, the elder of whom is already following in his footsteps as a crack reporter for the New York Evening Journal.

NEWS BRIEFS

HARRISBURG.—(INS).—Officials of several third class cities in the state are broaching a movement to obtain a share of all the automobile fees levied by the state.

At present all revenue derived from motorized vehicles is lumped into the motor fund for building and maintenance of roads. The state, however, returns to the counties a half cent of the gasoline tax it collects.

Officials of the third class cities are planning to meet here some time before the new legislature meets in January to plan a program to enforce their requests for a share of automobile and truck license fees.

Returns to the cities would be based, according to present plans, on the number of vehicles licensed in the respective communities.

Officials of the State Treasury and State Department of Revenue are watching the plans with interest but have made no comment.

NEW WILMINGTON.—(INS).—Ranging from aesthetic dancing and debating to varsity sports competition, students at Westminster College have a total of 72 different activities in which to spend their "spare" time.

While no one student could conceivably engage in even half of the activities scheduled, many of the seniors are active in 15 or more organizations. Last year 89 per cent of all students at the college were affiliated with one or more of the extra-curricular activities.

LANCASTER, Pa.—(INS).—A record for multiple motherhood in the canine classification was believed to have been established when "Pal," a year and a half old German police dog, presented her master, Police Sergeant Earl Colson, with 29 pups as her first litter.

The father of the big family was "Rex," a son of "Rin-Tin-Tin," famed dog of the movies, owned by Robert Kinsinger.

NEW CASTLE, Pa.—(INS).—Despite his advanced years, J. P. Rea, who will reach the age of 80 on February 25, 1935, braved the rigors of a hunting trip in Centre County and brought home an 8-point deer which he bagged with a single shot.
